'Races to Come'

1809 – 1822

by E C G
2015

What follows are the returns from Stockbridge Racecourse, [Stockbridge and Maddington Club meetings] from 1809 to 1822. And with those few words I have gone further without a typo than in my last compilation.

Racing in the years featured was very different from what it became thirty years later. The attendees were participants [owners, riders etc] and their families and friends. Most were on horseback, and others watched from carriages. There was no 'betting ring' to speak of as most betting was on a 'gentleman to gentleman' basis. There was almost, thankfully, an absence of two year old races. The riders were almost never named and never if they were 'professionals' [until 1822], and trainers were merely regarded as grooms and not worthy of mention.

The course was to start with the 'lower' course adjacent to the road. Mention is made in the race conditions in later years of the 'New Course'. This is almost certainly not the course upon which the races [including the Bibury Club meeting] were run from 1830 when John Day built the Grandstand; that circuit was about two miles, the race conditions in this period say 'once round' was a mile and a half.

One is very hampered in researching Stockbridge that there is a lack of written evidence for most of the nineteenth century; almost no letters survive and the press did not report on the configuration the courses or the accommodation for spectators. Even the superb Bibury Club Stand [1867] was never described. This was in stark contrast to other meetings, Southampton for instance, where full details of the new stand were reported. It is entirely possible that Stockbridge was, in journalists and other writers' minds, associated with private clubs [Maddington, Bibury] who conducted their business in seclusion.
